October 12, 1962 - The Columbus Day "Big Blow" hit Washington and Oregon. Winds of 140 mph lashed the coast for five hours. Winds reached 120 mph inland as frontal squalls funneled through the area west of the Cascade Range. Approximately 11 billion feet of timber were blown down, more than any event in recorded history and nearly as much as the combined annual log production of Washington and Oregon at that time. Extensive structural damage occurred with damage exceeding $225 million. Source: www.intellicast.com
